Comments for Public Posting: Does anyone think these most unlucky of animals does not feel pain in the same way humans do, physical, emotional, mental? The perpetrators should be subjected to at least a degree of the same most shocking, deliberate, drawn out acts of hideously extreme torture. Words could never adequately describe the level of suffering. There should be more graphic exposure, so that the Chinese wake up and stop what these vile, evil Koreans are doing.

Comments for Public Posting: I am interested in pushing for more greening of LA. I am on the WCKNC and the Resilience Liaison. How can we move toward requiring new building in the high heat index areas to install vertical greenery on every new building? Because of the likelihood of more and longer droughts we need grey water systems built into the new buildings to maintain plant life. I feel our building codes are very much stuck in the last century. We know what works and need to implement modern building codes to ensure Koreatown and every other neighborhood does it's best to fight climate change and protect our population. I have tried to find material regarding these ideas through the city clerk's portal. Perhaps I am not using the correct search terms ? I would love LA to be leaders and not have to spend much more money in the future retrofitting when we know we need to move now. With over 100K vacant market rate apartments we know investors are willing to let them sit empty rather than lower the rent so economics are not an issue. Thank you for your attention and I hope we can move forward with the greening of the city building codes. Best, Angie Brown
