Comments for Public Posting: Agriculture is what the pilgrims and native Americans survive in the Americas. Taking agricultural in anyway including livestock is taking away from peoples heritage. As someone who is a fourth generation cattle farmer, I can tell you that the animals on our farm is taken better care of then most peoples pets. I've witnessed my dad form tears in his eyes when the only humane thing to do was put down a grown cow or calf. I've personally blamed myself for not finding a cow that got stuck in a ditch due to a heavy rain storm that caused a mudslide and she had to be put down. Was it our fault they needed to be put down, no. Why is it not our fault, because their our lively hood, our family members. This farm is my family's legacy and my WHOLE family would be devastated is our county passed this kind of act. The kids in 4-H or FFA would literally cry for having to get rid of their show animals. Those kids form a certain bond, trust, and friendship with those animals. People who own horses have the same bond those kids have with their animals. Not to mention taking care of those animals the kids earn not only responsibility but respect for livestock. Don't pass this bill, I beg you. If you do you might as well pass one that takes peoples right to own pets such as dogs, snakes, cats, and so forth. Most people in the rodeo, ranch, farming, and other livestock based community respects and care for their animals as well as they would a beloved family pet. Why? Because they are family, these animals might be wild but snow, hail, rain, tornadoes, or hurricanes their fed, taken care of, and checked on. Agriculture helped build this great nation and farming, rodeos, livestock shows, and so on help keep that tradition alive.

The only house on our street or in our neighborhood that doesn't seem to believe in being respectful or courteous is 1432 lindacrest dr, Beverly Hills, Ca 90210. They are a house of tiktokers who rent rooms out to random people and every few weeks there is a new group of them. They have very loud parties till 6 am, charge entrance for parties- which I believe they need a business permit for, they trash the street; kids have od'ed on the street and there are acts of vandalism committed on our homes. We did not move here to deal with such disruption, noise nuisance and garbage all over the streets. I have pictures as well, but would only let me upload pdfs.

Comments for Public Posting: As a nearby resident (of "Rampart Village"), I beg the City's planning officials to save this building, one of this area's limited authentic cultural monuments. With an iconic exterior, a beautiful interior, and most importantly, a wonderful gathering space that has expanded during the last 2 years, this building, in its entirety, affords us area residents some of the beauty and warmth which is regularly granted to the wealthier residents of Los Angeles. If this were Musso and Frank or the Chinese Theater on the west side of the 101, city officials would clamor to assist in legitimate deals which really preserved these spaces instead of trying to fake out a public (whom they take for poor fools) with a ridiculous plan that does not even rise to the level of a facadicide.

Comments for Public Posting: Public Testimony of non-agenda within jurisdiction of Council
Last week, there were two senseless murders that took place in our city. Sandra Shells, a nurse who devoted her life to helping others, was beaten to death in a random attack by a homeless man, while she was sitting on a bus bench in downtown Los Angeles. Brianna Kupfer was a UCLA graduate student who had her whole life ahead of her. She was stabbed to death in a random attack by a homeless man, while she was working in a furniture store on La Brea Avenue. The reality is that not all homeless in our city are victims of society. Until the Mayor and City Council accept that fact and finally address the growing violent crimes committed by homeless in Los Angeles, more senseless deaths will occur!
