Comments for Public Posting: Ok so there are a lot of crazies that come to meetings but I see that any request granted can be done so with more comfort with light or knowledge of my beliefs. I am a Marxist and believe in full economic participation (at least the option being given). As well as modernization; to create and utilize technology mainly for direct interaction with government is a big objective of mine. As well as developing a consequentialist economic model as expenditures increase. I see that business models and economic models that work (whatever scale) are ones that should be embarked upon - and with my motion of development of what may be small serving but coherent models a more stable economic platform for us all. By consequentialist I mean one that serves a market and is very focused on utility - but which is not necessarily "general use." So it is an attempt I think to cleverly bring back industry that focuses on AMERICA - I am protectionist and I think that a sort of Ghandian approach to economics is the right one. Other nations don't rely so much on exports and imports as America currently makes seem is necessary on some unspoken tautology written on stone tablets. We must reverse that stigma and seek to create, celebrate, and promote our own productive powers and labor. I use the term consequentialist in that we have an opportunity that I hope we do not "pass" in use of technology for the creation of goods and services that are more of the sort of the immediate Socratic dialogue of life. Apps, APIs, Robotics, micro factories (in support of existing consequentialist economic mechanisms such as open AI), 3d printing, farm to table. Things that we can create and use that are more determined by the pressure of living in a society of humans who are more than likely capable of fulfilling group desires and needs (either individually or collectively). We must though advocate more ardently for economics and business that are consequentialist in that a market being know and a solution being known; then the application being "permitted" and this is something that we lack widescale observance of. I am going to work on convincing my Council woman Jurado on central city east neighborhood council acquisition of the old mark taper center into a business incubator to effect the "image" of poverty in only the way America could. In a way, that would suppose that poverty is not a demerit or a punishment but the result of family names, self aggrandizing ideology, and tokens of class division and separation imposed upon nameless and faceless citizens who labor in washrooms, kitchens, and empty skyscrapers and office buildings. We must turn opportunity belief in hope and a better future for ourselves and others into a logical and sequential platform for us as citizens as a collective and Central City East locating a business incubator (hopefully in partnership with a local SBA, SBDC, and EWDD) will hopefully have the effect of turning desperation, despair, and the real life horror of a tale of Sisyphus into an America (Los Angeles leading) which encourages neighborhood strength, curiosity, and opportunity. Godspeed! and Godspeed to America!
