Comments for Public Posting: Taking away the courthouse is tragic. It represents everything wrong with the world, and harms not just the local community but the Los Angeles community. It removes one more thing that unites us as a city in favor of something that does not. Skateboarding transcends any kind of monetary interest and is a fundamental part of Los Angeles culture. The city is making a mistake by allowing this to happen. Even apart from the skating, the farmers market that now happens there on Sunday's brings the community closer. Taking those things away is not progress. It illustrates a commitment to greed and profit for a small few, over culture and art, and community for the city. And it's just sad. Whatever you do to replace this will never come close. It's just a shame.
