Comments for Public Posting: It is sad to me to watch how much L.A. history has been destroyed, paved over, and unrecognizable. The Los Angeles theme restaurants, the Brown Derby, Tail o the Pup, among others erased from the L.A. landscape. You do have the opportunity today to stop this from happening. I hope you will. In addition, destroying the building that Shunji is in, will be a kiss of death for this business. By allowing the building this tenant is in to disappear during the pandemic is especially cruel by the building's owner. Shunji is an important business for me for personal reasons as many of my life's milestones have been celebrated here. I hope to continue to celebrate there. I hope you support the Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination of the Chili Bowl Thank you for your time Kristen

Comments for Public Posting: The Chili Bowl building is a one of a kind, beloved part of the fabric of Los Angeles. This building retains most of the essential physical and character defining features from the period of significance. It has a very important association with the people who live in the area and other Angelenos who love the character of the building. It retains the integrity of location, feeling, design and association. Please consider this building as a historical cultural heritage monument. It brings joy to a weary world!

Comments for Public Posting: I am writing to urge the Los Angeles City Council's Planning and Land Use Management committee to vote in favor of sending the West L.A. Chili Bowl nomination to the full City Council for Historic-Cultural Monument designation. The Chili Bowl is an important example of Programmatic architecture, of which there are not a lot of good examples remaining. It should be possible to design housing in a manner that incorporates the Chili Bowl into the overall design, without having to destroy this very cool and charming remnant of a bygone era. Please send this nomination up for a full vote. This is an important item of Los Angeles popular culture, and they just don't make 'em like this anymore. Thank you. Sincerely, Margaret Wynn

Comments for Public Posting: SAVE THE CHILI BOWL! Too much of LA's Googie and--in this case--programmatic roadside architecture has been demolished. Where we can preserve these gems, we should. Preserve and protect the Chili Bowl as an important sample of LA's architectural history. Thank you.

Comments for Public Posting: I am reaching out directly to you to demonstrate my support of preserving and earning the Historic-Cultural Monument nomination of the legacy business and structure, the Chili Bowl. I want to highlight a couple of key considerations for this designation: 1. The Chili Bowl in West Los Angeles is one of the oldest surviving examples of Programmatic architecture in L.A. Because so few examples remain today, Programmatic buildings are considered a rare resource type. 2. The Pico location is one of five remaining former Chili Bowl structures which numbered eighteen locations throughout Los Angeles County at the chain's height, dating back to the early 1940s. Small business eateries are facing an existential crisis, and with it, the loss of diversity and local neighborhood sustainability. Thank you for your consideration.

Facts and background: 1. The Cultural Heritage Commission voted to support designation as a HCM on Feb. 6. 2. Comments for Public Posting: I am submitting my support for the Chili Bowl's Historic-Cultural Monument (HCM) designation. It is important, especially now, that we seek to preserve the history and character of Los Angeles in as many ways as possible. Unique landmarks such as the Chili Bowl help to distinguish Los Angeles as "La La Land", where a bit of eccentricity makes for iconic locations drawing Angelenos and tourists alike.

Comments for Public Posting: I believe the Chili Bowl is an important part of Los Angeles programmatic history. It is a staple of the West LA community. Los Angeles prides itself with novelty, vernacular, offbeat, and otherwise one-of-a-kind architecture. You can't find this anywhere but LA. It is part of our DNA, our heritage. Please consider our history when making decisions that will impact our future.

Comments for Public Posting: Dear PLUM Committee & City Council - I am writing in support of granting historic cultural monument status to the Chili Bowl building. The prevalence of whimsical programmatic architecture was what made Los Angeles unique in the 1920s and 30s when it was in its heyday. You drove by and you smiled. It is important for interesting buildings to remain in the LA landscape, especially now as buildings of unprecedented size are taking over the city and the human scale is disappearing. These structures were small and easy to demolish. This is among the last of these wonderful buildings. Thanks to The 1933 Group, we have proof that programmatic architecture can be restored and repurposed for modern use. The Idle Hour "barrel" and their upcoming Tail of the Pup continue the tradition of eating in an imaginative space. Long live "rounded" architecture. Long live architecture that stands out as different and reminds us of the creative city we live in. Sincerely, Margot Gerber President Art Deco Society of Los Angeles

Comments for Public Posting: RE: Support for Historic-Cultural Monument Nomination of the Chili Bowl (Council File 20-0246). Dear City Council, I'm writing in to voice my support for the nomination of the Chili Bowl, one of Los Angeles' few surviving examples of programmatic architecture. These structures are an important part of the historic and cultural character of the city of Los Angeles and contribute to what make Los Angeles 'what it is'. They are unique examples of early American Pop culture architecture. Los Angeles possesses a unique urban and architectural character that needs to be preserved and celebrated ! best regards, Edward Bonutto Los Angeles, California

Comments for Public Posting: This is Bobby Green of the 1933 group, I have personally saved and restored three of the five major programmatic architecture buildings in Los Angeles. The Idle hour, the bulldog café and the tale of the pup hotdog. Los Angeles was once covered with programmatic architecture style buildings and very few are left today. They provide a strong source of identity to the history of the city and it's very important that every remaining one should be saved and protected. Ideally it could be saved in its original location, but at the very least protected and moved to an equally visible location within the city limits. Thank you.
