Comments for Public Posting: Rodeo shouldn't be banned because modern, sanctioned rodeos follow strict animal-welfare rules that are designed to prevent harm. Professional organizations require veterinarians on-site, limit how animals can be handled, and remove any competitor who mistreats an animal. The animals used especially bulls and broncs are bred specifically for strength and athleticism, and many are extremely valuable, so their health is a top priority. Beyond welfare standards, rodeo also preserves an important part of Western history and supports rural economies, livestock breeders, and agricultural communities. Instead of banning rodeo outright, continuing to improve regulations, oversight, and education ensures animals are treated humanely while allowing the sport and its cultural traditions to continue responsibly.

Comments for Public Posting: I don't know why California has to go and do ridiculous stuff like this. California was established by cowboys. Rodeos have never been a problem before, it's just a fun family friendly way for people to come together, get out of the house, and enjoy themselves.

Comments for Public Posting: We stand for rodeo as a lifestyle that promotes family, fun, and healthy competition. We all care about each and every person we rodeo with and our animals will always come first. Our vets work hard with us to ensure our animals get the best care and can compete at the highest levels. This is a sport where animal welfare is a priority just as much as sportsmanship.
