Comments for Public Posting: So my takeaway after reviewing the history is different than it was yesterday: there was substantive work here, but there also appears to have been an avoidable gap in the original policy-development process. If you're going to solicit stakeholder input, solicit stakeholder input. Don't just hear from whoever calls you first. And please, let's chill with the theatrics. Ask questions. Get answers. Explain what actually changed and why. The public should not have to dig through three years of reports and committee transcripts to understand how we got here. Ain't nobody got time for that. Apparently I did, but that is beside the point. And again, We Live. We Learn. We get Luvs. Stop fighting each other and work with each other please.
