Comments for Public Posting: I grew up in Los Angeles and part of what makes it LA is movies. Everyone I knew was somehow connected to the film and tv business and it is what makes it the city it is. It's become a dead town since the strike and it's ruining everything that made it a special place to live. As a family in the business, we have had to assume we will always have to split up and travel for work because no one will spend the money or the headache of shooting in Los Angeles. Right now, we are drowning in debt and draining our savings to stay here. What do we do when our industry has disappeared? Please please please fight for more incentives to keep productions from leaving town. Right now we need an emergency injunction- what is the most we can do to save LAs historical industry?
