Comments for Public Posting: I support this item. We need more space for people to walk and cycle, free of cars. This would help boost foot traffic to local businesses, and thereby boost their profits. As the recent pop up in this area showed, people living in Koreatown seemed broadly supportive of this. I think, at some point in the future, this stretch of road should be closed permanently to give people a better overall city living experience.

Comments for Public Posting: Starting the weekend park-like space in K-town is amazing. This area is often filled by traffic, so a temporary placement of a pedestrian area will revitalize this area. This area will be useful for the local businesses, since pedestrians are more at scale compared to cars which was shown a few days ago. When this pilot becomes successful, this should be a permanent task. This area can showcase what the future of Los Angeles will be like.

Comments for Public Posting: I strongly support this item. We need more park-like space for people, especially in Koreatown! A pedestrianized 6th St would help boost foot traffic to local businesses. As the pop up that was done on a Sunday a few days ago showed, people in Koreatown love pedestrianized space. I encourage 6th St in Koreatown to eventually be pedestrianized permanently.

Comments for Public Posting: Look at traffic from the perspective of people. The more we accommodate car traffic, the more people will feel that walking and biking are unsafe and fewer people will do it. It's an exponential process. The only way to edge back any walkable city or even habitable urbanism is to take measure like this seriously and enact them. Without push back against cars we can all expect to be living shorter, less healthy lives in dirtier more crowded cities.

Comments for Public Posting: This is exactly the forward-thinking LA needs to start practicing. Would love to see this implemented here and in other places throughout the city as well.

Comments for Public Posting: I support the permanent implementation of car-free blocks in Koreatown. We're already doing a ton of stuff right, like building more housing, promoting a walkable community, access to public transportation, and robust local businesses to meet the needs of the community. But we are in DIRE need of more spaces for people to be. I strongly believe the pilot for the pedestrian block between Normandie and Catalina will be very successful, with the potential to be replicated in several areas across the neighborhood. I am a KTown resident, and KTown wants more third spaces!!

Comments for Public Posting: I live a block away from 6th street and kenmore and would love to have a permanent pedestrianized plaza in the heart of koreatown. Me and my family are often looking for parks or car-free places to enjoy our day and we are always faced with speeding cars, car drivers that don't stop at stop signs and narrow sidewalks when shopping or dining in koreatown. This needs to be a priority to fill the void of green or open spaces in the most dense area of Los Angeles.

Comments for Public Posting: Strongly support a pedestrianized 6th Street in KTown. The neighborhood lacks shared Public spaces/plazas and parks. We need more park-like space for people, would love to see more trees and shade here as well. local businesses would benefit. Would be a great place for new vendors and small business owners to reach a new audience. Could have art, music, other social programming on rotation. As the pop up that was done on a Sunday a few days ago showed, people in Koreatown love pedestrianized space. This idea has been discussed and tested for several years now, please do it! Would like to see 6th St in Koreatown be pedestrianized permanently.
