Comments for Public Posting: In a city where enforcement of laws means something, this would be a good idea. HOWEVER, in LA the word "enforcement" is either looked at as a discretionary action by those responsible for enforcing, or it is too often simply not done. If done, it is likely it will come too late to make a difference. Parking enforcement works to raise money on days of street sweeping and to catch meter violators. Sadly, not much else with any consistency. IF and when there is a way to enforce the word "TEMPORARY" that is when a measure should be considered and not before. IF there is a way for residents and businesses to document and turn in violators (knowing that the City will never be there to monitor or show that temporary means something) then go ahead and adopt a program that includes that provision. Drivers will then know that SOMEONE is watching. Otherwise this creates a free pass for the many delivery vehicles that roam our streets to park wherever they wish whenever they wish. Wild Wild West revisited.
