Iran's attacks on fuel facilities stoke fears of escalating war

Gulf nations say they may retaliate. Tehran's strikes further imperil global energy supply.

By KEVIN RECTOR
AND NABIH BULOS

Iranian attacks on oil and gas facilities around the Persian Gulf on Thursday posed new threats to global energy supplies, as President Trump rebuked Israel for striking a key Iranian gas field, and other nations voiced growing fears that the conflict was escalating.

Saudi Arabia said it might respond with force if Iran continues to attack facilities in the kingdom, and the price of oil once more skyrocketed.

Trump said Israel acted "out of anger" when it attacked Iran's "extremely important and valuable" South Pars field, the world's largest natural gas field. Writing on social media, Trump said there would be "NO MORE ATTACKS" there — which Israeli officials later con-

Iran has never seen or witnessed before," Trump wrote.

The president's remarks came as Iran's intensifying attacks on Persian Gulf energy infrastructure further rattled and angered America's allies in the region and sent shock waves through the global economy. The price of Brent crude oil, the international standard, rose to $119 a barrel — or up more than 60% since the start of the conflict — before dropping to $110.

The strikes further threatened a global energy supply already eroded by Iranian attacks on ships in the Strait of Hormuz, through which a fifth of the world's oil is normally transported.

Despite repeated assurances from Trump and other U.S. leaders that the United States is rapidly wiping out Iran's mine-laying, missile and drone capabilities, Iranian attacks have continued on the vital waterway — with one vessel set ablaze Thursday off the coast of the United Arab Emirates and a second dam-
