Comments for Public Posting: As a lifelong resident of the San Fernando Valley, I support the planting of as many native and drought tolerant trees as possible throughout our neighborhoods. On this side of Los Angeles, we are blessed with sunshine and mountains, but aren't gifted with any cooling from a coastal breeze. Heat waves throughout the summer and fall disproportionately affect the health of residents in the area, especially those in low income neighborhoods. Investing in a healthy tree canopy will help shade, cool, and beautify communities, building resilience against the negative effects of changing climate patterns. The sooner we get these trees in the ground, the faster we can positively affect the daily lives of all Angelinos in the San Fernando Valley.
